THE PHOTOGRAPHER: JONATHAN R. GREEN

Born and raised in England, Jonathan traveled extensively through Europe after obtaining his B.S. in Geography & Geology. His travels then led him to the Galapagos Islands in 1988 where he trained as a naturalist with the Galapagos National Park and the Charles Darwin Research Station. His passion for photography always accompanied him, even underwater after he became a Galapagos Marine Reserve Dive Master. Since then, Jonathan has been published in Time Magazine, BBC Wildlife Magazine, The Royal Geographical Magazine amongst others, and has also exhibited at the Natural History Museum and the Olympia Exhibition Center of London as well as other venues around the world.

Jonathan now dedicates his time giving personalized workshops to a lucky handful of photography aficionados of all levels and origins in places such as Africa, Antarctica, Patagonia, Amazon, Central America, Peru and of course, the Galapagos Islands.

Jonathan is a Fellow of the Royal Geographic Society of London and currently lives with his wife and children in the Ecuadorian Andes.
